LIBRARY SERVICE

Of all persons engaged in scientific research those in the medical profession probably have to depend more upon the services of libraries than any others. The time of most of them is so largely occupied with their patients that very little of it remains for searching the source literature pertaining to the experimental studies which a wealth of clinical material makes possible. They must depend upon the labor of others to acquaint them with contents of the publications which bear upon the problems engaging their attention.

In response to this particular need, and in order to widen the services of libraries, several private agencies have also come into being for the rendering of just such service to members of the medical profession who are studying particular problems and who find it possible from time to time to report the results of their observations and clinical experiments. These private agencies are undoubtedly helpful in many cases in enabling the medical specialist to profit more completely from the work of others, by preparing papers of greater medical interest than would be the case where such assistance was lacking.

Such collaboration between trained searchers of references and busy specialists is responsible for a large portion of the important contributions to present day medical literature. That the libraries should aid these private agencies of information in their collaborative efforts cannot be doubted. The librarians should recognize the duty of making their own resources more widely available to those research workers both near and far, who either cannot afford the expense of true bibliographical assistance or prefer to rely entirely upon their own efforts.

It is such a broadening of library service which is the special concern of the Friends of the Army Medical Library. The Current List of Medical Literature is intended to acquaint everyone with the contents of medical journals as promptly as they appear, and Medicofilm Service undertakes to supply microfilm copies of all papers which may be desired at the lowest possible cost. It is hoped that these new library services will be found increasingly helpful in the promotion of medical research.

CURRENT LIST OF MEDICAL LITERATURE is published weekly and lists of RECENT BOOK ACQUISITIONS are issued several times per year as supplements. The subscription price for both is $5.00 per year in the United States and $5.50 per year in other countries. The Recent Book Acquisitions may be obtained separately at $1.00 per year.
